FALL 2023 SCREENING SCHEDULE

NCCCinephiles

Expand Your Horizons . . .

All too often, human beings find themselves in a rut. We need to branch out, to explore something different. Artists do this, too, often with invigorating results. They collaborate with new people or investigate a different form of art. Actors play against type. Join the NCCCinephiles this term for two splendid movies that will open your eyes.

Inherit the Wind

(Stanley Kramer, 1960)

Thursday, October 26, 3:15-5:30, E-142 | Presented by S. V. Buffamanti

How far would you go to stand up for what you believe in? How should good people who disagree on fundamentals interact in a democracy? Kramer's movie presents the dramatized controversy of the Scopes "Monkey" trial, a case that still seems relevant. Stellar performances by Spencer Tracy and Fredric March (the actor whom Marlon Brando admired above all others) are standouts, but other casting choices offer surprises, too.

La Belle et la Bête

(Jean Cocteau, 1946)

Monday, November 27, 2-4:15, E-142 | Presented by S.V. Buffamanti

Decades before Walt Disney Studios surpassed expectations when the animated Beauty and the Beast earned a nomination for Best Picture at the Academy Awards, Jean Cocteau and a bevy of collaborators used movie magic to bring that fairy tale to life in a live-action film that quite literally sparkles. Cocteau's influence continues to this day across many forms of art, including theater, film, and music. Come welcome in the winter months with a classic fairy tale, as you have never before seen it.
